THE NINETEENTH CENTURY AND AFTER

CATALOGUE OF

80652
17/11/06

CONTRIBUTORS AND CONTRIBUTIONS

FROM MARCH 1877 TO DECEMBER 1901

THIS catalogue is a copy of the list of published articles which the Editor has kept for his own use, and is printed for the sake of those readers of the Review who care to possess a convenient reference to its contents for the first twenty-five years of its existence.

More than a quarter of a century's experience has sufficiently tested the practical efficacy of the principle upon which the Nineteenth Century was founded, of 'free public discussion by writers invariably signing their own names.'

The success which has attended and continues to attend the faithful adherence to this principle proves that it is not only right but acceptable, and warrants the hope that it may extend its influence over periodical literature until unsigned contributions become quite exceptional.

No man can make an anonymous speech with his tongue, and no brave man should desire to make one with his pen, but, having the courage of his opinions, should be ready to face personally all the consequences of all his utterances. Anonymous letters are everywhere justly discredited in private life, and the tone of public life would be raised in proportion to the disappearance of their equivalent—anonymous articles—from public controversy.

In so far as the Nineteenth Century and After has helped to further that good end, it may claim for the writers whose names are recorded in the following catalogue that they have rendered a public service.

JAMES KNOWLES,
Editor.
